

Dealing with crisis:

Berliner Krisendienst is a counselling and support service for people experiencing acute crises. It is available around the clock and free of charge. At nine locations, people in need of help can receive advice in person or on the telephone without prior appointment – and by appointment also via video – anonymously, if desired.

Berlin Crisis Service provides personal counselling and support by experienced, specially trained staff. If required, follow up appointments can be arranged. In urgent cases, our staff will come to the location of the crises; mental health specialist doctors on standby duty are available.

Berlin Crisis Service also caters to the needs of people with learning disability and their relatives.

Berliner Krisendienst is provided jointly by Albatros gGmbH, Caritasverband für das Erzbistum Berlin e.V., KBS e.V. (Kontakt- und Begegnungsstätte e.V.), Krisen- und Beratungsdienst e.V. (KUB e.V.), Neuhland Hilfe in Krisen gGmbH and Platane 19 gGmbH.

Berlin Crisis Service is funded by the Bezirke of the State of Berlin and supported by Deutscher Paritätischer Wohlfahrtsverband, Landesverband Berlin e.V.

We all experience crises. Berlin offers a crisis service.

We all experience crises.

There is no such thing as a life without crises. But a crisis may become too difficult to handle on your own. We offer advice and support to people experiencing crises or mental health emergencies, their family members, third parties and professionals dealing with people in crisis situations.

These situations may entail family and partnership conflicts, problems at work or education, separation and loss of a loved one, loneliness or a serious illness.

Mental health concerns, such as addictions, traumatic experiences, depression, anxiety and psychosis, as well as physical or cognitive impairments, difficult experiences with mental health services, all of which may result in crises, helplessness, desperation and suicidal thoughts.

A prompt and professional response to crises and mental health emergencies – easy access and free of charge.
